2.1.1 Installing on domains with access control files

When attempting to install the FrontPage extensions on a domain with access control files (Access control files allow you to password protect a directory on your website. They can be created and edited via the Website Security function of WebsiteOS. Access control files are .htaccess files that contain webserver directives that control access to specific areas of a domain.), FrontPage Manager finds these files and performs the following operations in order to complete the installation:

1. Renames the access control file to a temporary name.

Note: Renaming the control access file will OPEN access to the directory associated with it, until install is complete.

- 2. An attempt to Turn FrontPage ON (install) is done again. If there are more access files, the second one is found and will be renamed temporarily. This will continue until there are no more access files and the FrontPage extensions are installed.
- 3. Returns the access control file(s) to its original name. This will re-SECURE access to this directory.

If the installation process is interrupted or cancelled for any reason before the last step is complete, one or more access control files will become orphaned. This means that they will not return to their original name. As a result, directories associated with those access files will no longer be secure and can be accessed without any restriction. In this case, the next time you access FrontPage Manager, you will be notified and prompted to either rename the orphaned access control file to its original name or delete it. The latter will result in an open access to the associated directory.

2.1.2 Installing on domains without access control files

Installing FrontPage will disabled following extensions:

- Ad Manager, File Manager, Plug-in Scripts & Security menu options.
- FTP access to your web site. You will only be able to transfer web pages to your site using the FrontPage "publish" facility.

If you perform an installation for a domain that has FrontPage extensions already installed, the FrontPage Manager will upgrade the existing extensions.
